

REJOICING OVER THE CHICAGO CHOICE.

TALKS WITH FINANCIERS.

Among the bankers and financiers the nomination was received with undiminished satisfaction. They declared the selection a wise one, and predicted for it success at the polls. General Garfield's position on financial questions was well known, they said, and his nomination will tend to heal all differences among members of the Republican party.

George S. Coe, president of the American Exchange National Bank, said yesterday that the Convention had made an excellent choice. "General Garfield is thoroughly sound on the financial question," Mr. Coe declared, "and, after all, that is the important question in American politics. No man, perhaps, who could have been nominated, has stronger convictions on this subject." Board of Directors. General Garfield is a representative American—self-made, versatile, popular; and his nomination will arouse popular

William Grauert, interpreter in the Post Office Department and a representative German, said: "Garfield's nomination is most satisfactory. It is in favor of Shreveport, and it is in favor of the South. He is a man of clean record, a patriot, a scholar and a gentleman, and he will have the entire German population with him."

Assistant District-Attorney Phelps, of the Post Office Department, said: "I would like to have seen Grant nominated, but as that is not the case, I will support Garfield, but as I am not a German, I will vote the party's choice. He is a good man."

FEELING IN THE DISTRICT-ATTORNEY'S OFFICE.

District-Attorney Phelps was found in his office, and when asked for his opinion of the nomination, said: "Garfield is a good clean Republican, and no stronger man could have been nominated. The fact that he comes from Ohio precludes any story of his being a native-born American. The contest will be an out-and-out Ohio one. All Republicans can unite under Garfield, and his election is certain."

Assistant District-Attorney Rollins said: "Garfield is

From an early hour last evening large numbers of men poured into and crowded the spacious auditorium of the Chicago Convention. The utmost good order was prevalent throughout the hall, and the delegates, as they appeared, displayed a disposition to collect quietly and to wait for the explanation that made General Davis the "dark horse." The explanation that gave the "dark horse" his name was given by General Davis in a speech that was listened to with intense interest and approval by his personal presence and admirably delivered speeches, that when the necessity of uniting upon a single platform was reached, the delegates of the various delegations easily transferred their votes to him. General Davis, in his closing remarks, said that the present was claimed that General Garfield had been enthusiasm the republican party. All the elements of faction will be quieted. There are no antagonisms to be soothed, no prejudices to be conciliated, and no wounds to heal. The party, after months of dissensions and rivalries, will now enter the canvass with a new and more lucid and harmonious front. The nomination of General Garfield increases the confidence of the people in our own State. And that nomination, every man acceptable, has another aspect virtually important to the republican form of government. It settles, now and forever, a question which, until now, was never seriously agitated. General Grant is the only one of our Presidents who has been re-elected for a second term. After having served two terms. An issue now before us was squarely made and has been forever settled. This victory is worth all it has cost."

Mr. Weed, do you think that General Grant's friends, no held out for him to the last, will come over and pleased with the nomination of General Garfield. Our first choice," he added, "was Mr. Suerman, but aside of him I think no better nomination could be made. I think Garfield will run wonderfully well, and be unbounded enthusiasm. Both as a soldier and as a politician he is a man of the highest caliber, and commands great popularity. He is a man of large sympathies. He was an anti-slavery man on principle, and always espoused the cause of the poor. He gives thoughts to all people who suffer, and to all people to live. Then his social and domestic relations are beautiful, and I don't suppose that any one better fitted to carry out to fill the Presidential office could have been found."

Q. Were you intimate with him, General?

A. Intimate? oh yes. I have known General Garfield, say say intimately, since I was thirteen years of age. He was then at school at a place called Chester, in

DEAR POINT, N. J., June 8.—The body of ill-dressed man, five feet nine inches in height, and exactly 71 years of age, was found in the fish trap at Granville yesterday. By a key-tag letters found on the body it is believed to be that of Augustine B. Smith, of New York. The body was much decomposed, and has the appearance of having been in the water several days. Customer will add it for a few days for the purpose of identification.

A DAMAGING STORM.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., June 8.—A dispatch to the Sentinel from Waukegan says: "The heavy rains and much damage to the crops, besides carrying away many of the houses, have been very bad here. The track of the Wisconsin Valley Railway is very washed, and trains will be delayed several days."
